Axing of 'shovel ready' project sparks outrage

The sudden abandonment of an $8.3 million project to prevent flooding in Milford town centre has baffled and angered locals.

Auckland Council last week shelved the stormwater upgrade at the busy intersection of Shakespeare and Kitchener Rds, citing Covid-19 financial pressures.

With a projected $550 million reduction in cash operating revenue announced, the Milford project is one of hundreds put on hold by council management. Councillors are having to revise the annual budget, now due for adoption by the end of July, a month later than scheduled,

North Shore councillors Richard Hills and Chris Darby told The Observer tough decisions were having to be made, including on community facilities and asset sales.

The council announced in April that the Milford work was set to begin. Construction company HEB had pipes at the ready. Hopes of ending intermittent flooding of the area

$5 million for new town centre

Construction of the new civic space in Takapuna will begin in early-to-mid 2021.

It has a $5 million budget, already approved, to be paid by Auckland Council development arm Panuku.

No development agreement has been signed for buildings surrounding the space, Panuku Priority Location Director Kate Cumberpatch told the Devonport-Takapuna Local Board last week.

Negotiations had been in progress but were disrupted by the Covid-19 lockdown, she said.

Board member Jan O'Connor said it was strange that a "landscape plan" was developed before surrounding buildings were built.

Cumberpatch said a similar sequence of development had occurred at Westhaven and Wynyard St.

It was always intended to prioritise construction of the civic space.

With the public space developed, the remainder of the 40 Anzac Ave site would continue to be available as temporary public space and car parking, Cumberpatch said.

With the Hurstmere Rd redevelopment under way, board members asked about the Anzac St carpark status prior to civic-space construction. Cumberpatch said the car park would remain open until construction began.

Additionally the Huron St carpark should open in August or September, she said.

Stormwater upgrade shelved

around St Vincent de Paul Catholic Church were high.

"Surely this was a shovel-ready project," Guy Armstrong, a driving force behind estuary environmental group, Milford WEEPS, said.

The Milford Residents Association wants answers on what will happen now. "We're just going to have to hope it's on the top of the list, not 10 items down," said co-chair Norma Bott. "When are they going to be able to afford it?"

Bott said the project manager was set to start work this week. "He was really disappointed. He had his guys ready to go."

Darby and Hills said they fought for the project to proceed, but despite procurement being underway, the final contract had not been signed so it was caught up in the across-the-board works deferral. "It was meant to be signed on Friday," said Darby.

Upgrades to Hurstmere Rd, Takapuna, had just beaten the moratorium. The councillors said because a good case had been made for the Milford work, they hoped it could be rescheduled.

The installation of larger pipes beneath the roadway was meant to aid flow into the estuary and to sort issues of waterlogging around Shakespeare Rd and Fenwick Ave. A stormwater treatment device to improve the quality of discharge into Wairau Creek was part of the work, to finish by autumn 2021.

Bott said a pile of pipes due to be used later in the project had been sitting in the small park by the East Coast Rd bridge.

"It's a great loss to Milford. It was going to fix up a [flooding] problem that's been there for such a long time and it was hoped that it was going to alleviate a problem in the Wairau Estuary."

You'll never get lost in Milford again

New "wayfinding signage" will be provided in Milford and surrounding areas in a $60,000 programme to improve awareness of walking routes.

It is hoped the programme will be rolled out into other areas of the Devonport-Takapuna Local Board in coming years.

The Milford Business Association (MBA) approached the board with a proposal to install signage and wayfinding in the Milford town centre and surrounding areas to promote local parks, beaches and other amenities.

The signage would inform people of the general direction of these amenities and the approximate walking time, a report to the board said last week.

The suburbs included in the work are: Sunnynook, Forrest Hill, Castor Bay, Crown Hill, Milford and Westlake.

The project provides the "opportunity to consider this activity across several suburbs in the northern part of the local board area, where there is a significant network of walkways which connect roads and parks to each other", the report said.

While board members supported the project, board member Ruth Jackson wondered if the money was better spent on areas that possibly needed better signage.

Member Jan O'Connor questioned the need for the money to come out of board coffers, when an application to the New Zealand Transport Agency for funding could be made.

2 The Strand: empty for 808 days

The former Takapuna Library building at 2 The Strand has been vacant since an earthquake notice was issued in March 2018. The 1956 heritage-listed public building has now been unoccupied for 808 days. At some point, its future will be determined by Auckland Council.

Covid-19 rules add drama to lockdown birth

A month on from the harrowing birth of her “lockdown baby” at North Shore Hospital, Nicole Boyne is relishing at last being able to properly introduce Karlee to friends and wider family.

Even husband Cam got to see his daughter for barely an hour around her arrival on 24 April. This was by emergency C-section after Nicole was forced to labour alone all day. After the birth, she was whisked off to a recovery ward, again without family support.

“I would not wish on anyone to have a baby like this during a pandemic,” she says. “I’m glad I was a second-time mum. If I was a first-time mum then I would have been a mess.”

Construction worker Cam dropped Bayswater born-and-bred Nicole (nee Czerniak) to the hospital at 7am. She was booked for an induction and he wasn’t able to accompany her to the ward under its Covid-19 alert level 4 safety rules. Nicole was nervous because the baby was large like her first child, Oliver, who had also required induction 3-and-a half years ago.

Her Hauraki-based midwife Denise Johnson settled her inside, before she was left in the hospital’s care. “I had to go through early labour and contraction without Cam. I was very anxious doing it on my own.”

Meanwhile, he was waiting to hear when he was allowed back for the actual birth. “He was a nervous wreck, just waiting for the phone call.”

After eight hours of unsuccessful labour, Nicole’s waters finally broke and Cam was contacted. But, as feared, the size and positioning of the baby meant a hoped-for natural birth wasn’t an option.

Efforts to encourage the baby to shift for induction also failed, as did five epidurals, so a C-section became inevitable. Even that proved tricky, with three attempts needed for a spinal anaesthetic.

When Karlee was finally born at 6.30pm, she weighed nearly 4.5kg (9lb 8oz). Cam soon had to say goodbye, leaving Nicole without a support person.

Having not eaten since early morning, she hoped for a meal, but only a few pieces of cold toast and a sandwich could be supplied. A water jug was out of reach of the immobile, exhausted and badly bruised new mother.

Plans to relocate to Birthcare Warkworth were slowed by discharge procedures the next morning. The recovery when she got there – away from the tense hospital full of Covid warning signs – was in a calm oasis.

Cam wasn’t able to stay over, however, because of the need to care for Oliver and also Covid rules that he had to stay for the whole time or not at all, so it was three more days before the family was truly reunited.

Oliver was thrilled to finally meet his bonny little sister, who had been referred to as Squirt throughout the pregnancy. Her actual name is a hybrid of those of her grandmothers: Nicole’s mother Karen, who moved into the family bubble to help out, and Cam’s mother Lee, who travelled up from Taupo to meet Karlee as soon as she was able. “Thank goodness for Facetime and video calling,” says Nicole.

She accepts that Covid-19 imposed tough conditions on health care authorities, but like her midwife she is disturbed that ongoing support for mothers seems lacking. Plunket services have been reduced. The Takapuna clinic is still closed, even under alert level 2.

Without the “amazing” extra support of her midwife, she says she would have been lost.

The Boynes are looking ahead now, planning for the day they can move their children nearer the beaches from their home in West Harbour to enjoy a sunny childhood like Nicole’s.

“I’m definitely a Shore girl,” she says.

Shore girls... Nicole Boyne and baby Karlee

Nicole still drives to her long-time family doctor in Devonport.

She’s keen to share her lockdown stories with local friends, many of whom she has known since Bayswater Primary, TNIS and Westlake Girls High School days.

“At the end of the day I’ve got a beautiful baby who’s growing well and she’s very chill, considering what we’ve been through,” Nicole says.

• North Shore Hospital recorded 488 babies born during Covid-19 alert levels 3 and 4.

Level 2 rules allow one support person during labour and birth. A second person may visit after the birth, but not both at the same time.

New civic space: what's in the design

The Takapuna Market will be effectively halved in the new civic-square design signed off by the Devonport-Takapuna Local Board last week.

The current market has approximately 250 stalls, while the new one will have 123, a report to the board said. However, the new space will be configured with “less reliance on support vehicles, to improve the character and maximise the number of stalls. It is also proposed that the market integrates more with the town centre by extending along lanes and the service road.”

Stalls will also go into Hurstmere Rd, with the aim of making the market more inclusive of wider Takapuna businesses.

Designers are confident the space will be able to accommodate “medium-sized occasional civic events and smaller regular community events”.

The space will include art, trees and a water feature to soften the square.

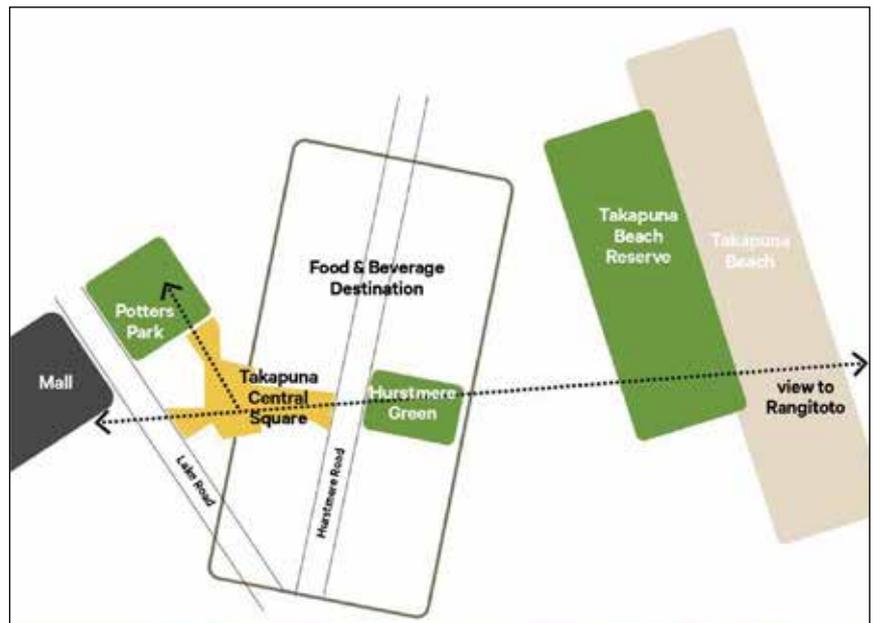

Panuku and designers Isthmus confirmed the aim was to have outdoor dining along the sunny southern edge of the square. Buildings on the fringe would be stepped back, so as not to dominate and to reduce shading.

Takapuna Beach Business Association chief executive Terence Harpur said the layout of the new square was world-class.

“I believe this plan will enhance and improve Takapuna into the metropolitan town centre it needs to be,” Harpur told the board’s public forum last week. “Lots of spaces” were included in the design, he said.

Panuku’s Kate Cumberpatch said designers had incorporated feedback from the board, including requests for more green space. Toilets were now placed near the bus stop, and a water feature was located in the sunlight.

The height of buildings near the square would be restricted, Cumberpatch said. Most would be a maximum of 20m high.

Flow-through... How the new square relates to other spaces in central Takapuna

Board chair Aidan Bennett supported the new design and the fact it retained the Sunday market – a “much-loved” part of Takapuna.

Member Toni van Tonder said it was an excellent design which created an “interesting, dynamic town centre”. She wanted further detail on lighting to help foster a “night economy”.

Member Ruth Jackson was concerned that some recreation uses talked about in previous meetings – such as table tennis table, a skatepark or basketball hoop – had been left out of the final design.

Jackson, Trish Deans, and Jan O’Connor voted against the design progressing, while Bennett, van Tonder and George Wood voted for the design. Bennett used his casting vote to get it through.

The design of the town square is by Isthmus Group in partnership with mana whenua-appointed representatives, Angell and Vern Rosier.

The design references the underground springs flowing from Lake Pupuke to Takapuna Beach and builds upon the meaning of Takapuna: taka – to collect, gather, assemble; and puna – spring, water, life. Each entrance acts as a wānanga or gallery and references water – the Waitematā Harbour, Lake Pupuke or Hauraki Gulf.

Anzac memorial incorporated in new design

The Takapuna war memorial on the forecourt of the former North Shore City Council buildings in The Strand will be moved to the new town square as part of the development, Panuku told the Devonport-Takapuna Local Board last week.

Devonport-Takapuna Local Board member Trish Deans said she was pleased the memorial would be in a public space, rather than in front of a privately owned building.

What's next?

The designs will go out for public consultation in June and July. Detailed work will then take place, and resource consents lodged. Work is expected to start next year.

Critic says Panuku plan should change due to Covid-19 effects

Panuku needs to alter its plans for 40 Anzac St to take into account the Covid-19 economic downturn, says a community activist.

“On the future of 40 Anzac St, it seems Panuku’s plans have not materially altered to reflect a profound shift in our community’s situation,” Iain Rea, of the Takapuna Residents Association, said.

Rea said the Hurstmere Rd upgrade would not be sufficient to return economic health to Takapuna. “I suggest 40 Anzac St can be key to underpinning the economic health of the Hurstmere precinct businesses and the community,” he told the Devonport-Takapuna Local Board’s public forum last week.

Panuku acknowledged that “the Sunday market is a key part of Takapuna,” Rea said.

“Given that the market is so key, I suggest that any immediate planning for 40 Anzac St should put the Sunday market at the heart of the development.”

It brought entrepreneurial activity and a visitor experience to the heart of Takapuna. It was also part of the precinct’s heritage.

“The DTLB should advocate for the return of the Sunday market to 40 Anzac St as soon as possible and that some seven-day market activity should be encouraged on a portion of the site – perhaps towards Madam Woo restaurant,” Rea said.

Takapuna chic – how the town centre could look

Space programme... an impression of how a completed Takapuna town centre could look following development. The plan below identifies the location of elements and buildings likely to be incorporated.

Shopping local will benefit needy

Milford Shopping Centre’s shop-local campaign will also help feed needy families.

When a customer spends $50 or more at Milford Centre, it will donate one meal to the North Shore branch of Bellyful, a charity which cooks and delivers meals to families who have a new baby or young children, and where someone in the family is dealing with serious illness.

The campaign starts on 8 June and runs for two weeks, during which the centre hopes to donate 1000 meals.

Milford Centre marketing coordinator Kate Carey said: “These meals are not just a form of financial support, but also emotional and social support – it’s someone coming to your door with a nutritious, ready-to-eat meal, a smile and a bit of conversation.”

Volunteers get together for a “cookathon” once per month and freeze the meals, then deliver them to families as needed. Bellyful receives referrals from health professionals and social workers, friends and families themselves.

“As with most charities during Covid-19, Bellyful’s ability to fundraise was severely limited and so they need donations now more than ever, and have more families in need than ever,” Carey said.

Watercare snubs local board approach

Watercare has knocked back approaches from the Devonport-Takapuna Local Board to meet to discuss water-saving measures.

board deputy chair George Wood told the board at its meeting last week he was disappointed that Watercare did not seem to “value meeting with us.” Wood entered local body politics in 1998, and became North Shore City mayor on platform advocating clean beaches and waterways platform.

North Shore City introduced many innovative programmes, he said. One was the use of treated wastewater from the Albany sewage treatment plant to irrigate sports fields. Wood was keen to see this considered by Watercare.

“Its virtually clean water... wastewater treated to a high standard,” he said.

With Auckland’s population growing from 1.1 million in 2003 to 1.6 million today, not enough infrastructure planning – including water provision – had occurred to take in the increase, Wood said.

The board would approach Watercare again for a meeting.

Wood said he hoped a good relationship would develop along the lines of the one the board had fostered with the Tūpuna Maunga Authority.

The flipside of Covid-19

During this Covid-19 lockdown, Aotearoa is being given a much-needed breathing space. We have seen the benefits globally of the drop in pollution levels. Satellite imagery shows that air pollution levels worldwide have dramatically reduced; Venice waterways are looking impossibly clean, and in Delhi the harmful gas nitrogen dioxide fell by more than 70 per cent.

The cleaner pandemic skies do show how fast pollution reduces when we reduce our burning of fossil fuels, and there is increasing evidence that the Earth's protective ozone level is recovering.

It is not just the closure of industries that are having a positive environmental impact; fewer people are driving cars, flying, venturing on cruise-ship holidays and using electricity at workplaces.

Unsurprisingly, dirty air makes Covid-19 more lethal, due to increasing the risk of acute respiratory distress syndrome. These less polluted pandemic skies should also reduce other pressures on hospitals struggling with Covid-19. Studies show that short-term changes in air quality have an immediate impact on heart attacks, stroke and ED visits. All increase when pollution spikes.

So, what are the lessons for the kind of world we want to build post-pandemic? Many communities have taken big steps to protect each other from this health crisis and the speed and extent of this response gives some hope that rapid action could also be taken on environmental issues.

All these changes we are making at the moment are having a significant impact on the ocean. Ocean pollution levels have dropped since the lockdown. Being in, on or near the ocean is beneficial for our health and wellbeing. It has been no surprise that the most frequent lockdown level 4 complaint in Auckland was the prohibition on driving to one's local beach.

Milford WEEPS (Wairau Estuary Environment Preservation Society) has been campaigning for over six months to have Wairau Estuary and Milford Beach cleaned up of toxins and human waste. More than 300 attendees at a public meeting in February and over 2300 signatories to the WEEPS petition call for water quality improvements reflects the desire of the locals.

Covid-19 has brought environmental issues to the forefront of community discussions and it is time for the politicians to listen and act. This will require major capital investment in stormwater and sewage reticulation.

Only last month the Ministry for the Environment and Stats NZ published a report (Our Freshwater 2020) highlighting worsening river and lake pollution and the threats that our native freshwater species and ecosystems are under.

The central government financial stimulus package for Covid-19 is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity. It offers a unique chance to fund vital public health and environmental projects that have failed to attract adequate funding for generations. It is important that those projects not deemed "spade ready" are not shovelled under the carpet.

Resturant closures only partly due to Covid-19

Three Takapuna restaurants have gone out of businesses during the lockdown.

Mexicali, Burger Wisconsin Takapuna and Ha! Poke Takapuna are all in liquidation.

Directors of Tacopuna Ltd said the restaurants were in trouble for some time with "no foreseeable improvement in future trade in Takapuna, particularly after Covid-19 lockdown."

Other reasons included: "Continuing deterioration of sales on an annual basis since opening - driven by a marked increase in local restaurant competition over this period in the area, cannibalising restaurant trade with a static working/residential population," director Devon New said in a liquidators report dated 14 May.

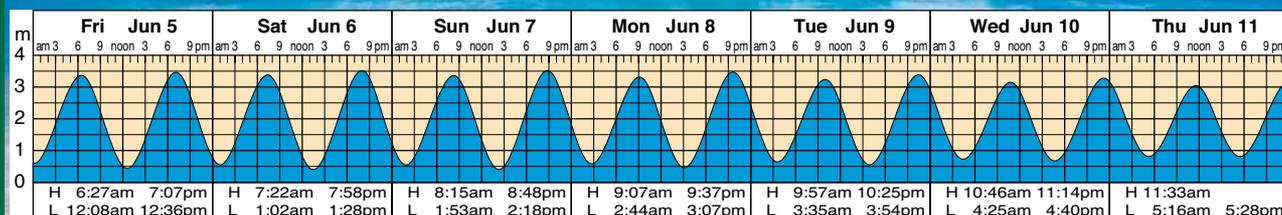

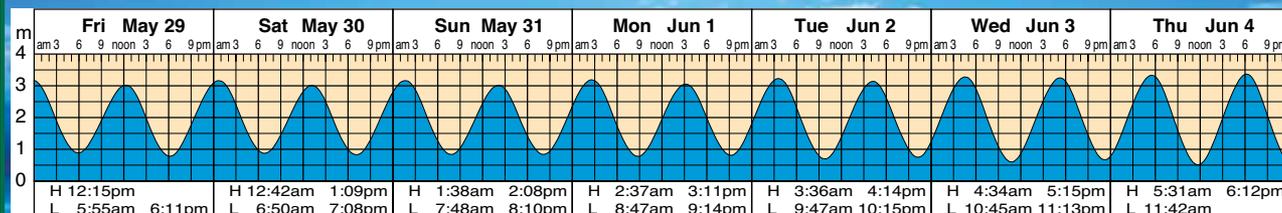

UberEats proportion of sales, which significantly eroded margins, was seen as factor in the closure, as well as high rent and increasing costs.

Unsecured creditors amounted to $452,000.

Overcoming the orange cones – Takapuna toughs it out

Takapuna needs the support of its local shoppers more than ever right now.

Fresh out of lockdown, stores desperate to make up for missed business have faced Hurstmere Rd being turned into a one-way construction zone.

The project is updating ageing infrastructure and creating a more pedestrian-friendly, landscaped zone as part of the centre's wider regeneration. But until it is finished, tough times have only got tougher.

The Takapuna Beach Business Association wants to get the message out that despite the disruptions the road is definitely open for business.

"The street is all open," said chief executive Terence Harpur. "There is always going to be access to all the shops, there is low fencing, seating and amenities around for shoppers as well as plenty of nearby car parks. It's business as usual – just with a little digger in the middle of the road now."

Initial post-lockdown support from locals had been great, he said, but this needed to continue. "This time is very hard for the Takapuna businesses, the majority of which are locally owned and operated. It is immensely important for our community to support businesses over the next few months. "Most retailers, hospitality and personal services had little to no income for eight weeks, while still incurring the vast majority of costs. We may lose some of them if they don't get the support of the local community. I urge everyone to shop local!"

To help with this the association is launching a "Support Takapuna and Win" promotion, whereby anyone spending $20 can enter to win one of two $5000 spending sprees.

Carpark art progresses

Draft designs of work by two Maori artists to decorate the new Takapuna car park on the old Gasometer site will soon be shown to mana whenua.

Graham Tipene from Te Wheke Moko and Tessa Harris from Taonga Toi Ltd were selected from a group of candidates for the commission from Panuku, the Auckland Council-controlled organisation steering the development.

A Panuku spokeswoman said that after a consultative hui in mid-June, it was expected their pieces – which had a cultural context relevant to Takapuna – would be prepared for display on the internal lift lobby walls of the building.

Lake Pupuke event returns

Milford's Christmas festivities are set to start early this year, with the return of the Christmas by the Lake concert.

The free concert at Sylvan Park in late November will feature the Auckland Symphony Orchestra and a choir of 300 children drawn from local schools.

For four years from 2015, Christmas by the Lake was a popular event, but it failed to win enough funding to be held in 2019.

Event management company Seven Events Ltd has persuaded the Devonport-Takapuna Local Board to contribute $15,000 this year, so the event can be the "kick-off" to Christmas celebrations for 2020.

With backing from Milford Business Association, the plan is to draw together the community in a pretty green space and attract interest in the Milford town centre and its businesses.

Popular car event revs up again

Takapuna will shake, rattle and roll with a classic car show again this Labour Weekend.

The Takapuna Rocks event, which doubles as a community fundraiser, attracted more than 200 entries and between 3000 to 4000 visitors when it was staged for the first time last October.

An even bigger turnout is predicted this year, as word spreads in the classic car community. It is hoped up to 300 cars will be on display in The Strand overlooking the beach, alongside family fun-day activities.

Food trucks, live rock'n'roll music and dancing, a pin-up competition and vintage markets will be part of the set-up.

The Devonport-Takapuna Local Board backed the event at its latest meeting with a $4000 grant. It was told proceeds from show registrations and a collection by Rotary would go to local charities Yes Disability Resource Centre, Shore Junction and Make-A-Wish NZ. Organisers hoped the total of $3600 donated last year would be surpassed as the event grew.

Takapuna Beach Business Association head Terence Harpur welcomed the event's return, saying: "This is a fantastic event drawing in thousands of car enthusiasts from around New Zealand. 2020 is going to be even bigger and better."

As a sponsor, the association would work with the organisers to enhance the experience and involve local retailers in festivities.

Don't dump dirty old tat

Op-shops and hospice stores are pleading with people who spent lockdown sorting out their household goods and clothing not to dump everything on their doorsteps.

While good, saleable, clean items are welcome, an influx is unmanageable.

Dirty clothing cannot be dealt with and if mixed with quality items, the risk is all may have to be dumped.

Ask about furniture pick-ups or consider taking bulk lots to bigger depots, rather than to small local community shops. Hold back out-of-season items for now.

Burger King off the menu

Burger King Takapuna won't reopen, after receivers for the troubled chain said the store was one of five nationally being closed for under-performance. Efforts continue to sell the other stores which are still trading.

The Covid-19 crisis was cited for pushing the fast-food business under. Stationery chain Kikki K is also closing its New Zealand stores, including one at Shore City.

Another store exiting Takapuna after 35 years is Trade Aid. The supplier of fair trade goods had signalled plans to quit its quiet Hurstmere Rd store before lockdown. Businesses along the road face challenging months ahead, with street improvement works under way.

Whales given the flick by local board

The Whale Tail Art Trail proposed to include Takapuna next year has failed in a bid to win funding support from the Devonport-Takapuna Local Board.

The public sculpture trail is an international charity initiative for World Wildlife Fund, with a planned 70 whale tails to be set up across Auckland for three months from February.

The Takapuna Beach Business Association wanted one in the town centre, believing the event would be a drawcard and emphasise the area's connection to the sea.

"It is disappointing that the local board did not want to support a family arts sculpture event for our area," said association chief executive Terence Harpur, who had requested $15,000 for the event.

He pointed to the Big Hoot, a trail of large painted owls set up in Auckland previously, as having attracted more than 280,000 visitors across the city, engaged 9000 school children in arts learning and generated an estimated $14 million in spending.

Takapuna Pool closed under level 2

Takapuna's public swimming pool remains closed under alert level 2, with no definite sign of when it will reopen.

Credit is tightening

A few months ago, we urged people with financing needs to act fast and not delay. This has proven to be correct as we are seeing a creeping tightening of credit conditions as lenders become nervous about the impact of the slowdown. Particularly for self-employed people, who have experienced a reduction in income, as the servicing issue is going to be a major constraint on available finance. We urge prospective borrowers to speak to us first as there are a variety of lenders out there with different criteria.

A few things could help borrowers, such as allowing KiwiSaver to be used for a first investment property to help young people living at home access the property market without actually living at the property. Also, allowing foreign superannuation funds to be eligible for KiwiSaver withdrawal once the funds are transferred to a New Zealand fund.

And hopefully the government rescue package can extend to helping developers continue to open up land and housing when other sources of funding dry up, as well as helping fund the interest component of mortgages that may fall into default through the actions of government policy to shut down the economy.

We are here to help and advise for free on property finance.
