Neighbours fear more slips at building site

Troubles at a Takapuna apartment development have left a neighbour unable to access his driveway and garage because of subsidence and another relocated from her home to a hotel to work because of noise from pile-driving.

Plaster cracks and a broken window have been reported at other houses near the building site at 42-44 Byron Ave.

The site was closed down briefly late last month, but limited work has since resumed. Fourteen two-storey apartments are planned on what was once two residential sections near the bottom of the road, which ends in a cul de sac above mangroves.

Worksafe said it was notified of ground collapsing on an adjoining property due to unsafe excavation on the building site.

Hospital volunteers churning out masks

North Shore Hospital Auxiliary volunteers are turning their sewing skills to making masks.

The colourful creations – an addition to a range of items the group makes for the comfort of patients – are proving welcome.

Mask-wearing “makes people feel more comfortable”, says auxiliary president Linda Smalley. So far, the group has sewn 400 masks to be given to inpatients of the Waitemata DHB’s Specialist Mental Health & Addiction Services. It is also making double-sided cotton masks in three sizes for public sale.

“Masks are our first big fundraiser,” Smalley says. They are being sold for $5 each, well below the going rate, as a “service to the community”. This was made possible by volunteer time and using donated fabrics, with only elastic to pay for.

Masks are typically being sold for $10 to $15 elsewhere, with versions marketed by New Zealand designers priced as high as $69 each.

The group started making its masks around a month ago and is selling them via social media. It runs out of a hospital house on Shakespeare Rd, and has had support from the Well Foundation to improve the interior into a cosy space to work from.

Around 15 sewers are rostered to help, with five other regular volunteers co-ordinating library services, providing reading materials to clinics and wards.

The most popular items the volunteers make are capes and knee rugs, often for longer-term patients. Other items include padded boots, baby wraps, and knitted and sewn baby garments and fleece toys.

Smalley, who has been involved with the auxiliary for seven years, the last three as president, says she thinks members of the public are getting used to the idea of donning masks for everyday use. Hospital staff and visitors are required to wear them.

“I expect to be making them for a while,” she says.

Teen arrested after foiled robbery attempt

Police have charged a 16-year-old male in relation to a foiled robbery attempt at a Forrest Hill liquor store.

The attempted robbery on the evening of Saturday, 5 September, followed another unsuccessful raid on a dairy in Beach Haven.

Detective Senior Sergeant Callum McNeill said a group of people in masks rushed into the dairy and began climbing over the counter, attempting to steal items. A staff member confronted them and they immediately ran out, fleeing in a stolen silver 1999 Honda Accord.

Shortly afterwards, they arrived in Forrest Hill, where several people again attempted to steal items before being confronted by the store owner and running off.

The 16-year-old has been charged with committing burglary with a weapon, burglary and getting into a vehicle.

McNeill said the police investigation is continuing “and we cannot rule out further arrests in this matter”.

2 The Strand: empty for 904 days

The former Takapuna Library building at 2 The Strand has been vacant since an earthquake notice was issued in March 2018. The 1956 heritage-listed public building has now been unoccupied for 904 days. At some point, its future will be determined by Auckland Council.

Residents suffer as project hits ‘unknown conditions’

After visiting the site it issued a prohibition notice on 29 August. “This notice prohibited work from taking place until a geotechnical engineering report was carried out by a competent person and a remedial work plan and risk management plan was supplied.”

The notice was lifted the next day, a Sunday. Auckland Council inspectors visited the site at the same time as Worksafe and ordered fencing for safety’s sake at the tenanted house next door. This was erected across the driveway and between the house and a garage to the rear, after slippage beneath the garage.

Alex Zhai, who lives in the rented house with his wife and two small children, said a site manager from the development visited him on 27 August and asked him to move his car. “Then we saw it [the land] had slipped under the garage,” Zhai said. Workers covered the area with black plastic, then “put concrete on the face of the landslide”, he said.

The garage borders the construction site where an open cut was left exposed for months on the sloping and dug-out eastern edge of the development property. It was along this edge and after rain last month that subsidence began.

Zhai has been told it may be one or two months until he can use the garage. He worries about ongoing stability. “It’s lucky the rain has stopped,” he said.

Sandra Allen, who lives further up the road, said she and other residents questioned why the development won Auckland Council non-notified consent, given its scale. They wanted ongoing monitoring on what they say is historically unstable ground.

“It’s a nightmare down there for them,” said Allen of nearer neighbours who have also had vibrations from the pile-driving and muddy road surfaces to contend with.

Steven Salt, who lives directly across the road, said the development has “upset a lot of people” and had caused further issues with parking and mess. Some people’s houses had suffered plaster cracks, and the noise and vibration had gone on for a long time. During lockdown, he had worked from home and the development had been very disruptive.

He questioned if the method of building was appropriate for the type of land. “Developers are going to have to come up with some sort of compensation for people who have suffered property damage.”

Maureen Clark said the first she knew of the development was at the beginning of the year when site work began opposite the townhouse complex she lives in. She cannot understand how the development with extensive pile-driving was consented. “It’s like a sponge where they are building.”

The English-as-a-second-language teacher works from home and another neighbour is a shift worker. “There was a lot of noise, metal on metal, it was phenomenally noisy,” said Clark. At one stage pile-driving of large steel poles deep into the site had her jumping out of bed. “The building started shaking and I was really really frightened... it felt like an earthquake”.

At one stage, she said she was put up at the developer’s expense for a week so she could continue her work from a room at the Spencer on Byron hotel. “They gave all the owners in the immediate vicinity some ear plugs, which I thought was inappropriate and incredibly patronising.”

Pile-driving on site had halted for now, said Clark, who said she had been told a smaller machine would be brought in.

Mike Gibson, a director of ZYJ Group Ltd, the Albany-based parent company for ZYJ Construction, which was contracted to build the $8 million value development for a private developer, said the site had ongoing issues.

“We know we’re not flavour of the month on that street,” he said, but the company wanted to maintain communications with residents.

ZYJ was the “meat in the sandwich”, said Gibson. When work began – to supplied geotechnical reports and designs – “latent underground unknown conditions” were uncovered.

Pile on... Noise and vibration was caused by driving metal piles into the Byron Ave development site

The company was now working with “subject matter experts and tertiary authorities” to deal with matters arising.

Auckland Council did not respond by press time to Observer questions about the consenting and monitoring of the development.

Gibson said work had slowed because ZYJ had had to come up with additional safety controls around noise. Piling, which ZYJ sub-contracted, was only a small part of the project and the worst of it was done, he said.

Takapuna campground plans take shape

New look... an artist's impression of what the redeveloped Takapuna Campground may look like

The demolition or removal of Rose Cottage and other council buildings at the Takapuna campground has been proposed as part of its redevelopment.

Rose Cottage, which has been used as the camp manager's house, has been substantially altered from its original design and does not have a Code Compliance Certificate, says a report to a Devonport-Takapuna Local board workshop.

Any renovation of the building will be costly and will have to be met by Auckland Council, the report says.

The new campground operator and Auckland Council have been working together to run the park for the past six months, with a higher of people staying in caravans than expected.

This has raised concerns about ease of access to the park. The single-lane entrance is often blocked by waka ama boats and café delivery vans as well as caravans and motor homes trying to manoeuvre safely, the report says.

The park is only running at 30-40 per cent occupancy, so the issue will continue to worsen as occupation increases over summer, it says.

The proposed driveway alteration would include a two-way lane and a pedestrian crossing next to the Takapuna Beach Café. Around 3m of flat reserve will be used to widen the driveway.

Current seating at the reserve would be improved, however, by a low wooden perimeter fence along the coastal boundary, with the barbecue facilities relocated.

The plan for the campground is to have 40 multi-use sites (caravan, motor home and tent), and increase the units from 6 to 12.

The final height measurements for the units have not been finalised. The operator does not want the units to be any higher than the current fence line and is very aware and mindful of neighbours views, the report says.

The local board asked that if Rose Cottage is to be relocated from the site, some of the space be used to compensate for land lost if the two-lane driveway is implemented.

Landowner approval is to be sought for the work to address stormwater/coastal inundation issues and the carpark development.

If that is granted, a resource consent will be sought, with the aim to complete building works by late 2023.

Dumped rubbish upsets neighbours

Neighbours confronted with a giant pile of trash left outside a Bracken Ave, Takapuna, house for nearly two months had to play the "squeaky wheel" to get action over the eyeseore.

Two large overflowing flexible bins, illegally parked on the grass berm, have finally been removed, but a residue of rubbish was left behind for several days. This included an old chair and carpeting left outside the rented property on the corner of Burns Ave.

Ray Bennett, who lives nearby, said he and five or six other neighbours had complained to Auckland Council to get something done. Devonport-Takapuna Local Board member Jan O'Connor chased up officials too. Residents had also approached those at the property, including a man who said he was the property manager, but this had not helped.

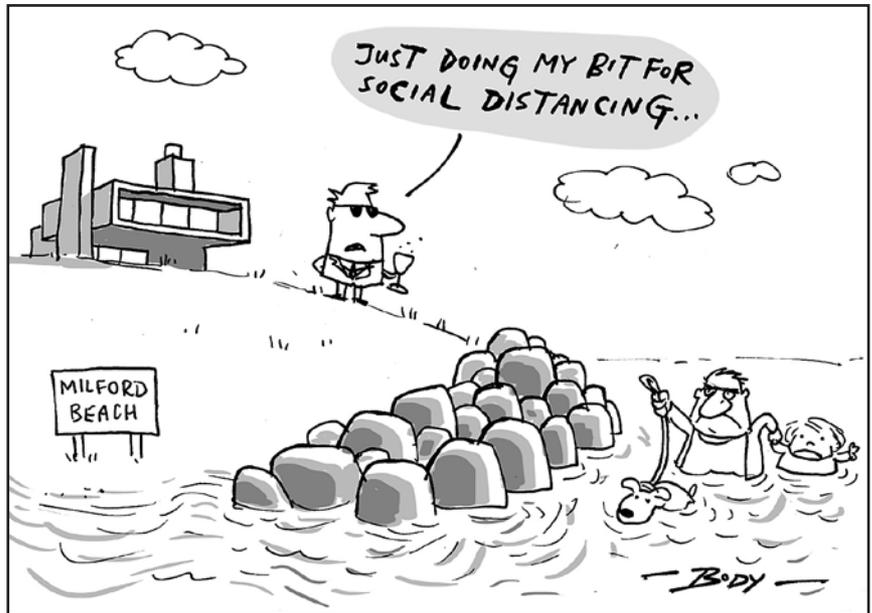

Bennett said he initially blamed the bin company for parking the bin illegally, but later learned that many people obtained that type of bin from a third party, such as one of the large hardware chains, and that such bin companies only knew where a bin was when it was full and they were called to collect it.

He found the company concerned clearly stated that its bins should be kept on people's properties, not on the pavement or berms, until a collection was imminent. It seemed common for this to be ignored. "All over Auckland these bins are left out."

A council spokesperson said when it contacted the property owner, he agreed to pay for Waste Management to collect the bins. Extra illegally dumped waste it collected.

Bennett said he appreciated that the council, with its Covid-19 reduced budgets, might struggle to police such matters, but residents should not be left dealing with a potentially contaminated mess.

Covid alert sounded Shoreside

A person later diagnosed as having Covid-19 visited Les Mills gym in Takapuna and Countdown and The Warehouse in Milford last week.

Warnings were sounded to gym goers who attended the same classes on 9 and 10 September that they are considered close contacts and should stay at home and contact Healthline about testing.

Auckland Regional Public Health Service (ARPHS) advice is that people who were at the gym for different classes or at the shops are at lower risk as casual contacts. But those at the gym around the same time in other classes have been advised to seek a one-off test in any case. Shoppers were told to monitor their health.

This is the second time in two weeks that North Shore residents have been put on alert, after news that a bus driver on the NX route had tested positive earlier in the month.

Gym goers in the same classes had been asked to stay at home and contact Healthline on 0800 3585453 as soon as possible for testing to be arranged. ARPHS said casual contacts should remain vigilant for the signs and symptoms of COVID-19, but did not need to self-isolate unless they become unwell.

The person attended the gym for a 5.30pm RPM Sprint class followed by a 6.15pm Body Combat class on Wednesday, 9 September. On Thursday, the person was back for a 9.15am Body Combat class. The gym has had a deep clean since.

The shop trips in Milford were on 10 September, to the Warehouse from 11am to 11.15am and to Countdown from 11.45am to noon.

Takapuna retail on the up

The latest retail figures show a much-needed bounce-back of spending in Takapuna, although times remain tough for the hospitality sector.

Spending overall was down just 3.5 per cent in the week ending 6 September, when compared with the same week last year.

With school holidays fast approaching and good progress having been made on new seating and paving at each end of the Hurstmere Rd shopping strip, the shopping centre is hoping for even more support from local shoppers.

“Seeing locals, visitors, and employees supporting our local businesses has been such a welcome sight and believe me it is really appreciated,” said Takapuna Beach Business Association chief executive Terence Harpur. Although retail had picked up under alert level 2.5, hospitality operators were finding restrictions made for tough trading.

“Here’s hoping we can move to a ‘level 1.5’ as soon as it’s deemed safe enough,” said Harpur.

Marketview data reported in the Observer earlier showed that retail trade in Takapuna had slumped 85 per cent under alert level 3.

“There has no doubt been some pent-up demand for retail as many shops were closed for nearly three weeks,” said Harpur, who hopes the support from returning shoppers will continue.

The latest figures show spending on home and recreational retailing was up 58.3 per cent compared with the same week in 2020; food, liquor and pharmacies were 18.9 per cent up; and clothing, footwear and department stores 14.6 per cent. But hospitality and accommodation were down 26.3 per cent.

“We always knew that hospitality would be down, as big groups are prohibited, patrons all need to be seated, and many tables and chairs have to be removed. However, what’s also suppressing their revenue is the fact that many people are still working from home, and others are just not socialising as much under level 2.5,” Harpur said.

With contact tracing having ramped up and more people wearing masks and understanding health measures, he wants the government to consider lowering levels. It was also important for Aucklanders to support their local businesses “as much as they can”, he said.

Meals in Milford

Food trucks are returning to Milford Reserve as the evenings lengthen. Popular takeaway sellers will be parked up on Thursday, 24 September and on selected dates in the months ahead. The evenings are organised by the Food Truck Collective, which books a variety of vendors and brings in tables, benches, and rubbish and recycling bins.

Up, up and away

The pump track opposite Hurstmere Green is being moved to Northcote for a time, but the Takapuna Beach Business Association is keen to get it back again over summer. The temporary undulating bike ride for children has proved a popular attraction for several months.

Dragon in progress

The Sunnynook Community Centre has a dragon stone activity for kids these school holidays. Preschool staff painted a dragon head, and children have already painted the first stones. A tail of blank stones to add to the display and instructions are outside the centre.

Volunteers wanted

Volunteers are still needed to maintain planting at Brian Byrnes Reserve. A small group gathered for the first tree-planting event at the reserve earlier this month. North Community Trust environmental coordinator Fiona Martin is also seeking volunteers to look after reserves around Forrest Hill and Sunnynook, and in Hurstmere Rd and Byron Ave, which are on track to be predator-free streets. Training and pest traps can be provided. The aim is to get one in three local residents actively trapping. Martin said there had already been a lot of interest from residents around Hurstmere Rd and plenty of rats have been caught. To register your interest in becoming a volunteer, go to the North Shore Birdsong Project Facebook page.

Anne Maree Court Rest Home... it's where the heart is Imagine a place that's a home away from home for its closely-knit residents – Anne Maree Court Rest Home exudes tranquillity, calm and a sense of belonging.

“When residents say they want to go home – meaning Anne Maree Court – that’s when I know that we do a good job,” says Facility Manager Jo Lochery.

Nestled in the heart of what is becoming the enhanced and modern Northcote Greenway community, three minutes from bus routes and motorway, shopping centre and library, this special place boasts intrinsic points of difference that make it stand out as a rest home, respite and hospital care facility for your elderly loved ones. It has been privately owned and operated since 2003. Sheryl Samuel has thrived in aged care since 1996, putting all her expertise as a registered nurse and care into the facility. The team, hand-picked to fit perfectly into the family-orientated home, ensure high quality care and personal attention. Jo and the team bring together strong family values combined with formidable depth of knowledge and expertise. With a nurse on site 24/7, the diverse staff offer personalised care along with a great sense of community and fun.

“We’re like one big extended family,” says Jo. “That feeling of homeliness comes from our ability to get to know each and every person at a personal level.”

Their ethos is that everyone has potential. The full-time diversional therapist ensures each individual pursues their own creative passions. She discovers residents’ hobbies and interests then develops tailored activities and care plans to meet their needs.

Alfie, the resident “therapy puppy”, and two cats bring joy and comfort to animal lovers. In addition, the internal and individually created gardens enable the green-fingered to grow and enjoy flowers and vegetables and golf lovers have helped build and now play on their own mini-golf course.

Not only is delicious home cooking served daily, wonderful high teas and communal celebratory events bring residents and staff together for fun sociable occasions. The home’s minibus, donated in gratitude by the family of a former resident, is also a firm favourite, taking residents out at least twice a week to enjoy the local environment and scenic day trips.

Tucked down Fraser Ave, Anne Maree Court provides comfort, support, and a sense of belonging to elderly residents and their families. Offering a great selection of rooms accommodating up to 57 residents, plus additional private and intimate spaces for visiting family and friends, this unique rest home provides longterm and short-term care, daily carer relief, and crisis acute-care services. If you are considering taking the next step into aged-care, Sheryl, Jo and the team extend their warm invitation to you: “We invite you to pop by, have a bit of lunch and ease into it slowly with a single day or overnight stay, whatever works for you.”

Become part of the Anne Maree Court family – with rooms now available, the team are looking forward to meeting and welcoming you.

Thank you to our families and friends for their support and understanding during Covid-19 lockdown.

Rotarians pitch in at Takapuna Playcentre

Rotarians from Takapuna were out in the sun last week to help clear bush and vines smothering the backyard of the Takapuna Playcentre.

Volunteers David Morrison, Dan Jennings, Neil Murray, John Gould and Rotary President Geoff Pownall removed overgrown bamboo along with poisonous moth plants. Heading into spring, the playcentre has plans for a vegetable garden in the area.

For Jennings, who joined Rotary three months ago, this was his first volunteer activity with the club. "I'm just really glad I get to do something to help the community," he said.

Rotary also organised an arborist to remove four exotic trees from the playcentre property and prune other trees to remove the risk of falling branches.

"It's been really great since the trees were removed – we have more sunlight and our paths are no longer slippery," said Takapuna Playcentre property manager Gabrielle Marris.

She said it has been especially good to receive help from Takapuna Rotary as Covid-19 restrictions had made it harder for families to visit the centre.

The playcentre has plans to organise a working bee to tidy up their front gardens as well.

Marris said there was plenty of capacity for more members. "However, until the country moves to level 1, family visits to the centre will be limited."

Pownall said after a drop in members over the last couple of years, Takapuna Rotary has been focussing on small "beautification projects" to help make a difference in the local community.

In the past year, Takapuna Rotary has renovated the street benches in Takapuna's CBD, completed gardening projects at Wilson School and at the Lake House Arts Centre and helped out with gardening projects and e-waste recycling at Abilities Group in Glenfield.

North Shore's secrets revealed

Secret stories of the Shore will be a feature of the Auckland Heritage Festival this month. The theme of uncovering the hidden past runs through the event this year, and will take in the tale of a ghost at the Lake House Arts centre in Takapuna and tours of tunnels in Devonport.

Lake House artistic director Grae Burton will bring to life the building's 130-year-old history, employing augmented reality technology and projection. This ranges from it being home to a "lady in white" who is said to appear in ghost form from time to time, to being used in a Dave Dobbyn music video. The Navy Museum will highlight stories about Torpedo Bay, from the ship builders to the torpedo men.

Author Russell Glackin will lead people through the historic military coastal defences on Maungauika.

He will also discuss two Boeing flying boats rumoured to have been stored in secret tunnels and hidden rooms on North Head around 1925.

The festival runs from 26 September to 11 October. A full programme is available online at www.heritagefestival.co.nz

Theatre company back in business with summer Shakespeare

Auditions begin this month for the Shoreside Theatre Company's 25th anniversary Shakespeare in the Park performance scheduled for early next year.

Despite a loss of $50,000 in missing funds still under police investigation, the cancellation of an Agatha Christie show earlier this year and uncertainty as to whether the company could continue, the theatre is back on its feet with the help of community donations.

It had a great response to a Givealittle page and received generous donations from members and people who regularly attend their productions.

"The wonderful donations have allowed us to take a breath after everything that happened during the first lockdown," said Shoreside president Catherine Boniface. "We have been able to continue operating and planning for our next show."

Due to Covid-19 restrictions and the uncertainty around alert-level changes, they have made the decision not to run with their usual workshop group auditions. This year's auditions are being held by appointment.

"These are really challenging times for theatre, but we are pushing along with our Shakespeare play and focusing on attracting new talent to perform and new audiences," said Boniface.

"We had an amazing response through our Facebook page for auditions. As well as having plenty of returning actors, we have also received quite a bit of new interest from new actors and young people."

Next year's Shakespeare in the Park will feature Hamlet and Much Ado About Nothing, co-directed by experienced directors James Bell and Jason Moffat.

Across the two plays, 50 to 70 actors will perform. "Shoreside Theatre's annual Shakespeare show has been a highlight for many people in the community and I think everyone is really keen to get back into things and put on a show," Boniface said.

Shoreside, which has been operating for 45 years, elected a new executive committee in early August.

Shakespeare in the Park will run from 23 January to 20 February 2021.

Te Araroa trail signs coming for local coastal route

Takapuna and Milford's popular coastal walk (left) is set to get new signage to identify it as part of the national Te Araroa trail.

The new regional Te Araroa Trust will look after Auckland's stretch of the trail, including Takapuna's favourite local walk.

Trust chair Clayton Wakefield says some people aren't aware that the Takapuna-Milford walk is a part of Te Araroa and that people can follow the trail all the way from Takapuna to Cape Reinga. Wakefield plans series of day walks on local sections over summer to promote the trail.

The trust will seek funding help from the Devonport-Takapuna Local Board for signage, improvements to the trail or upgrades to routes.

"One of our focuses this year will be working with more volunteers to enhance the trail and strengthen links with the local councils and walking groups," Wakefield said.

Locals could become "trail angels", which might involve putting up trail walkers, giving them somewhere to camp or providing a meal.

The Cat comes back for PumpHouse performances

The Tim Bray Theatre Company was in the middle of rehearsals when the country went into its first Covid-19 lockdown. The show was cancelled, and funding cut.

After nearly three decades of creating theatre based on New Zealand literature, the company had to launch a crisis appeal for support.

Six months later, a remarkable $100,000 has been donated by the community to keep the theatre alive.

It also received a $5000 grant from the Devonport-Takapuna Local Board.

“It was a hard experience,” says company director Tim Bray. “We learnt a lot when funding dried up, but we have been amazed by the support from the community, who didn’t want to see us fall over.”

During the school holidays, the company will stage Greedy Cat, based on Joy Cowley’s much-loved illustrated children’s book, at the PumpHouse Theatre.

Bray says the theatre, which usually seats 192, will accommodate only 70 with social distancing restrictions.

The four actors in Greedy Cat have come together again to rehearse, having forgotten their lines since the first time around.

“Being back in rehearsals – despite the restrictions – for a funny, energetic and charming show has lifted all of our spirits,” says Bray.

The company had invested money into developing the production, but when lockdown hit, presale tickets across five venues around Auckland had to be refunded. They company found itself in a “massive financial hole”.

Without guaranteed multi-year funding, the biggest challenge was pulling together the money needed to continue. “It was amazing to hear why people were donating and what our theatre meant to them and their children and grandchildren,” Bray says.

Bray says Covid-19 had made school groups wary about being on buses to go to watch plays, but the company had kept children involved by providing video footage of shows.

“We know people are still fearful of going out but we think this show is just the kind of positive energy that people really need during this time.”

Advance sales have begun for Greedy Cat, which will also be seen by 1200 children attending under the “Gift a Seat” programme, which provides donated or funded tickets to children from low-decile schools, Kelston Deaf Education Centre, the Blind and Low Vision Education Network and through the Make-A-Wish Foundation.

The Greedy Cat season will include sign-language-interpreted performances, audio-described performances, touch tours, and a sensory relaxed performance. It runs from 26 September to 10 October, at 10.30am and 1pm.
